AITA/IATA asbl

CYT Theatre Conference Programme

Curtain Up! The Kids Are Back is a one-day conference, taking a look at children's and youth theatre groups during recent years and asks the following questions:

What have we learnt from COVID and other crises?

What more can be done?

How do we give kids a voice?

AITA/IATA has assembled speakers from across the globe to talk about their own practices, research and findings concerning children's and youth theatre. As such, the conference offers talks in English, French and Spanish. Translation happens simultaneously, and where it is not possible, the recordings that will be online during the two weeks that follow will have subtitles in the three languages.

AITA/IATA unites and links amateur theatre groups, community theatres and organisations actively working for theatre amateurs and individuals throughout the world who love creating and making theatre in their free time. People and organisations we link with, work with and for children, with young people and with adults. AITA/IATA brings people together by offering meeting places, so that they can share knowledge and practice within the field of theatre in order to deepen understanding, develop practice, create new opportunities and strengthen the global amateur theatre sector.

11.15–11.45 CEST – Slot 1

Panel (EN) – Nurturing Creativity as a Right in Season and out of Season: Glimpses of Children and Youth Theater in Asia

The panel explores a number of initiatives from the region that ensures theater is available to children and youth no matter what the situation is, whether within pandemic or outside the pandemic; whether within the normal, the new normal, or the abnormal. And as theater and the arts are to be found within the coordinates of society and history, our insistence of doing theater also leads to the birthing of new forms, ways of doing, and strategies of engaging the public. Our sharing about our experiences of doing children and youth theater in our region of Asia is premised in these contexts.

Beyond the fulfillment and validation we get in providing creative spaces and platforms to the young, we always view our work in the theater as a response to the needs in the area of child development. We need not look to the promise of the future where we see theater as a meaningful and effective means of cultivating the potentials of children in view of what they could possibly become. Our work's value is in the now as we provide opportunities for children and youth in claiming their rights to development and participation especially in moments of crises and emergencies.

About the Panelists

Fredyl Hernandez is an artist-teacher member of the Philippine Educational Theater Association (PETA), and a faculty member of the Department of Art Studies, University of the Philippines Diliman. He is frequently invited as a resource person / consultant for theater and arts curriculum and other activities of the Philippines' Department of Education. He is also a newly accepted member of the National Commission for Culture and the Arts' National Committee on Cultural Education.

Surangi Kosala is a teacher by profession as well as an actress and programme presenter. She fondly incorporates Sri Lankan performance traditions in the theater classes that she conducts with her students. In 2019, she participated in the 2nd Next Generation Program of the National Centre of Theatre for Children and Young Audiences in Lahore, Pakistan. She is currently taking her MA in Theater Arts in Middlesex University.

Hyejin YUN is an artist who tells and shares a story of ordinary people around us with Gayageum, a Korean board zither with 12 silk strings. Her performances mainly focus on connecting the past with the future using a Korean traditional instrument. She is a Gayageum player, composer, and an actress. She wants to communicate with people of this time through her music and art.

Su Rong is a drama teacher with seven years of teaching experience. She always attempts to use drama to assist her students' learning and development, and enables them to discover themselves by engaging in meaning-making and connecting with the world. She also has a background in drama and museum education. She is a PhD candidate at Middlesex University.

Elisabeth Toulet (FR) – Le personnage de théâtre pour enfant, ce grand éducateur de l'enfant

In 2004/05, Elisabeth Toulet carried out action research with children who participated in the creation of The Iliad and The Journey of Ulysses, based on Homer, in order to better understand how theatrical expression is formative for the child and under what conditions. This study shows that by working on their character on stage, the child can accomplish an inner work that opens them up to themselves, to the other and to others and makes them grow in humanity. "The whole point of acting is to give of oneself," said Jacques Copeau. The stage is not a place where one learns to "pretend" but a place of where one discovers who one is by taking the risk of giving oneself as one is: "I do theatre to communicate with the whole world," says Clara, 10 years old. Elisabeth Toulet proposes to share with you the conclusions of her research, based in particular on testimonies of children from families living in extreme poverty.

About Elisabeth Toulet

French, born in 1953 in Paris, Elisabeth Toulet was confronted during her first years of teaching with the existential malaise of many adolescents. Her encounter with theatre people in 1976 revealed to her that every person has the desire and the capacity to become an "actor" in their life and in the world in which they live. Leaving the French National Education system, she became involved in the development of artistic education from childhood onwards: in 1982 she created a Children's Theatre Festival in the Champagne region of France, during which she initiated the shooting of a film with 450 Amerindian, Quebecois and French children on the encounter between peoples: "L'Avenir de l'homme dans les yeux d'enfant" (broadcast by France 3 and Radio Canada in 1987). Following this intercultural adventure, she created in 1986 the International Academy of Theatre for Children, which offers theatrical workshops and the creation of shows for children aged 8 to 12 in France and in other countries: Belgium, Lebanon, Hungary, Italy, Mexico, Algeria; since 2009 in Angola (www.theatreenfant.org). Elisabeth Toulet has published an essay on art education: "La Beauté à la rencontre de l'éducation" (Collection Ethique en contexte, L'Harmattan, Paris, 2015). She now divides her time between the International Academy of Theatre for Children and heritage mediation in Vézelay, Burgundy, on a Romanesque site classified as a World Heritage Site (www.vezelay-visiteur.com).

11.45–12.15 CEST – Slot 2

Lillian Mbabazi (EN) - Finding the Voice of the Young person in Theatre for Young Audiences: Case of Productions born out of research using participant-led and creative strategies in Uganda, East Africa.

I look to focus on three aspects:

1. Why the young person's voice is important?
2. At what point in the creation process is it given prominence?

3. How do practitioners in Theatre for Young Audiences give space for the voice of the young persons to thrive in the production?

About Lillian Mbabazi

Lillian Mbabazi is an Assistant lecturer, Researcher and Facilitator of Applied Theatre, Theatre and Drama in Education, and Young People's Theatre at Makerere University's Department of Performing Arts and Film. She is a founder member of Arts Applied Uganda Ltd (AAU Ltd) and has also served as one of the Directors for AAU Ltd. from 2020 to 2022.

She is an experienced arts educator who has conducted projects in Intergenerational Theatre, Refugee Theatre, Inclusive Theatre, Community Theatre, Educational Theatre, and Theatre for Young Audiences. She has coordinated projects such as the Youth Theatre Project (2013), supported by the Danish Embassy, The Inclusive Theatre Project between Tramshed Theatre Company in Black pool U.K and Makerere University, and the Refugee Sustainable Livelihoods Project in 2015 among others.

Lillian believes that " Art is the lens through which the world should seek to better herself.

12.15–12.45 CEST – Slot 3

Ebba Lovise Joks (EN) – Indigenous Theatre in Norway

Indigenous groups in Norway are creating their own, unique kind of theatre.

12.45–13.30 CEST – Keynote Speaker: Edith Coen (EN)

How much do children's and youth theatre groups interact with one another on an international level? What issues do they prioritise when planning or participating in an international collaboration? Edith Coen is sending out a survey into the wide world to find out the answers, asking if groups have participated in international festivals and how they have heard about them. She is also looking into which current issues these groups think are important, from gender equality to clean water to education. Next to the survey, she is also conducting in-depth interviews with people active in children's and youth theatre groups, from all over the world. Edith will present the results and data she will have gathered at that point.

About Edith Coen

Edith Coen is a graduate student at the University of Antwerp, currently pursuing a master's in arts and cultural management. She previously earned a bachelor's degree in theatre, film and literature studies, as well as a master's degree in cultural studies. Her research focuses on international children's and youth theatre groups and festivals. She is looking at how groups interact with one another on an international level and in what way organisations let children and youth participate in governance.

13.30–14.30 CEST – Lunch Break with Workshops for Youth

French Workshop – Les Impairs

In an interactive workshop, les Impairs offer an hour during which young people are invited to discover and explore the creative principles of rewriting theatrical classics. Using a monologue from Shakespeare's Richard III and the rewriting of it by les Impairs in their show Dick The Turd, young people are encouraged to create their own interpretation of the monologue through a writing exercise. They are guided to transpose the monologue into a world that inspires them and to use the writing processes that allow them to have fun with the words while respecting the initial structure. They finish the workshop with tools to create a rewrite by themselves. Beforehand, the presenters, who are actors and creators of the show Dick The Turd, introduce them to the artistic process and show them short excerpts from the show to show them the endless and daring possibilities of rewriting theatrical classics.

Les Impairs have given this type of workshop in dozens of high schools during the years 2021-2022.

About les Impairs

The company les Impairs brings together 8 emerging Montreal artists in Quebec. It works in research, creation and theatrical production and is organized collectively, favouring a participatory and collegial creation process. It seeks to produce a critical reflection on the relationship between the creator and his society, through original texts and rewrites of classics. With a fondness for physical theatre, the tension between body language and poetic speech forms the core of its artistic proposals. In autumn 2022, the company presented its show Dick The Turd at the Théâtre aux Écuries from 6 to 24 September. In the summer of 2021, the members of les Impairs presented the theatrical tour À cœur offered in five Montreal boroughs as part of the Nos Maisons project call. The company is currently developing Y'a quoi après la mer, a theatre project for teenagers, as well as a contemporary rewriting of the Thebaid epic (Thebaod) and an original creation on ordinary terrorism (Rien n'a changé).

Spanish Workshop – Roxana Avila Harper
